Ethos

Born of innovators and artists, Ramblers Way creates ethically sourced, skillfully crafted, American made sustainable clothing for men and women. Founded in 2009 by sustainability pioneer and former owner of Tom's of Maine, Tom Chappell, Ramblers Way is committed to protecting the planet, supporting local economies, and building its business based on lifelong values.

Commitment to Sustainability

Environmental sustainability is a journey. Currently Ramblers Way's efforts include designing with renewable fabric sources; partnering with American ranchers, farms and factories which support working wages, ethical working conditions and humane treatment of animals; operating with a low carbon emissions process in manufacturing, using direct dye methodology, running primary and secondary waste treatment facilities that return water cleaner than when it came in; packaging and printing with recycled materials; and always asking why, who and how to ensure we're innovating for the right reasons.

Clothes

All Ramblers Way garments are made from premium, natural fabrics designed to take you from office to outdoors.

Rambouillet Merino Wool

Ramblers Way Rambouillet Merino Wool is sourced from ethical ranchers in Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Nevada and Texas. The superfine long-staple Rambouillet fibers are spun parallel to each other to make unparalleled worsted yarn and produce a clean, smooth and tightly knit yarn that's free of the usual fiber ends that cause you to itch.

Pima Cotton

Commonly called the 'cashmere of cotton,' Pima Cotton is known for its softness and durability and was developed by the Pima Indians of the American Southwest. Ramblers Way Pima Cotton is grown in California's San Joaquin Valley using pesticide-free and low water growing methods.
